Teach an online course in Moodle.

A NEW CHALLENGE

You're an accomplished teacher. You've taught a variety of courses and students. Maybe you've done staff development for colleagues. Now you want an opportunity to reach new audiences and learn new skills. Why not develop and teach a new course—on the web?

ONLINE TEACHING MADE EASY IN MOODLE

Whether you're a veteran of online courses or you're curious about distance learning, the virtual classroom is now within every educator's reach. You can teach an online course in your school or across your LEA thanks to LEARN NC and Moodle.

Moodle is an open source learning management system that empowers you to deliver the interactive and engaging content 21st Century learners expect and enjoy. You can easily integrate audio, video, images, as well as up-to-the minute Web content into your lessons and assignments.

Moodle packs all the functionality of platforms like Blackboard, but features a more intuitive and user-friendly interface. That's why many schools across North Carolina have already adopted Moodle as their learning management system of choice.

WE'LL SHOW YOU HOW

LEARN NC will train you to leverage this powerful learning management system for your own online class. If you sign up for LEARN NC's three-week Moodle Training, you'll learn the ins and outs of managing a course online, from uploading assignments to grading tests to having online discussions via Moodle's interactive message boards. Moodle Training will give you the knowledge you need to adapt an existing online course—or create one of your own, all before the 2008–2009 school year begins.

FREE RETRAINING

If you completed Blackboard Training with LEARN NC, either online or face-to-face, you can receive your training in Moodle at no cost. Moodle Transition Training for Blackboard Instructors is a self-paced course designed for users already familiar with learning management systems. If you have questions, a LEARN NC facilitator will be available to help you with any problems you may have.
