GLOBAL POINTS OF PROGRESS - Russia: Moscow has hired its first female metro drivers since the 1980s, swallowing changes in nationwide legislation barring women from certain professions. First introduced in 1974 and updated in 2000, a controversial registry identified 456 jobs considered too physically dangerous for women, including train operator, auto mechanic, and sailor. Moscow released a statement in January saying the first cohort of 12 women completed training and was ready to take passengers. Other transit authorities are expected to follow suit.
